Doran renews supply agreement with GE for electrical connection components

Cincinnati, Ohio – Earlier this month, Doran Manufacturing, LLC and General Electric established a renewal to the supply agreement for electrical connection components that Doran produces for GE.

“We are very proud of our long history as supplier to General Electric and our ability to work with each other to reduce redundancy and maximize the efficiency for both companies” – said Jim Samocki, General Manager, “and this agreement is a solid indicator that Doran continues the company’s legacy of providing quality components in a timely manner and highlights our ability to compete in a global market.”

The components that Doran provides to General Electric were the result of a collaborative engineering development project between the two companies that occurred more than eight years ago. The unique component design and automated assembly process enables Doran to produce consistent parts that satisfy GE’s stringent quality standards in a cost effective manner.

Cincinnati based Doran Manufacturing has been providing electrical connection devices, terminal boards and fuse boards since 1953. In addition, the company has provided transportation safety products for school buses, commercial trucks and RVs for more than thirty-five years, including: Tire Pressure Monitoring Systems, LED and Incandescent Exterior Light Monitors, Sleeping Child Check[®] monitors, Emergency Exit Monitors and a full range of LED lighting products.
